Mike says it's a real chore two shoot to girls at the same time; "I'm having to dress one, while shooting the other one!" Sorry Mike,... hard for us to feel sorry for you.

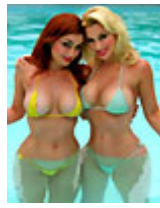

He admits it's a bit easier when they are both on set together though, because his attentions are not split. Still, there are TWO faces to get working together, TWO poses that must compliment one another. We can see here that Mike's solution is to keep things symmetrical. It turns out, this compositional simplification has it's own psychological charm...the girls seem to mimic one another, like VERY close friends. And boy, do we want to join them!
